The "ladies' tailor," referred to by Graves in his note, is supposed to be David Chaitkin of the tailoring shop at 258 South Main street. Mr. Chaitkin, when seen last night and shown the note, declared that there had never been any relations between himself and Mrs. Graves that could have given her husband grounds to make the implied accusations in the note. Chaitkin said that Mrs. Graves had been employed in the tailoring shop up to a week ago Saturday, and on one occasion he had taken her to the theatre. He said, however, that she had asked him to take her, and he declared that he had been to her home only once, and then only to see if she were able to work, after a sick spell which she had.

He said he had never seen Graves, and didn't know anything about Bowen Jenkins. Chatikin declared that Mrs. Graves had been keeping company with several men whose names he did not know, and had no hesitancy in

THEORY OF OFFICER

REGARDING TRAGEDY

Few theories have been advanced by the police officers as to the origin and cause of the trouble between Graves and his wife yesterday which resulted in the death of both. One, however, that has been suggested, was advanced by Detective Chase, who expressed the opinion that following a quarrel which had been begun, the woman threatened to carry her threat into execution when tests, and he, becoming enraged, fired the two shots which caused her instant

"It is not likely that the exact origin said the detective last night, "but it looks to me as if the woman was attempting to leave her husband when he killed her. She had few articles in the room, and while they quarreled packed up her belongings and told him she was going to leave. They were in the back room then. I believe, and, lifting her bundle under her arm and taking a few articles of toilet in her other hand, she started for the door.

'Graves, exasperated by her deser tion and other causes, seized the weapon, and, with a few strides, reached her before she arrived at the outer door. He placed the weapon directly against her head and fired. I cannot think of any reason why the deed should have been done at the time in preference to any other time, if he had prearranged the affair, unless the man was partially drunk. A whisky flask was found in the room, and may partly explain the double tragedy.
